

Surely Susan O'Keefe (Letters, September 29), doesn't believe 30-year-old office blocks like King George Tower in George St are beautiful?

If beautiful is an apt descriptor for that dog-ugly building, I suppose gorgeous aptly applies to the 36-year-old Goodsell building, or dreamy to heritage-listed outdoor dunnies, statuesque for sewer vents and stunning for asbestos-ridden fibros?

Modern high-rise apartments look spectacular in contrast to the non-genuine heritage Moore plans to preserve.

Genuine heritage is beautiful, however, non-genuine heritage used as a pretext to prevent quality modern development is just wrong.
